Taking captives is important part of warfare. Harming civilians is not permissible, because of those captives many innocent Palestinians were able to reunite with their families.

In the battle of Hunayn, the enemies of Muslims brought their non-combatant families to the battlefield as a strategy to encourage them to fight and not escape (as their families would be on the line).

They lost, and after the battle, the Muslims took the women as prisoners of war. They later released them.

Allah has allowed Muslims to take prisoners of war. As Muslims, we should submit to what Allah, the most just and most wise has decreed, even if we don't fully understand the wisdom behind it. I'll try to give a more full picture of what happened though.

The disbelievers came to attack Muslims after the conquest of Mecca. Their goal was to eradicate Islam. They would have killed most of the men, and enslaved the remaining men and women.

The disbelievers were the aggressors. Why would they not take those on the battlefield as prisoners of war? Like another commenter mentioned, prisoners give you a lot of leverage and can avoid further wars as you now have leverage over them. Even wars from other groups when they see the might of Islam.

Enemies of Islam would be encouraged to attack Muslims often if they know they won't lose much each time.

It's important to keep in mind that although these women were non-combatants, they still supported those fighting by encouraging them, acting as medics, and feeding them. In addition, Arab women would sometimes fight if the men needed extra fighters during the battle.

However, that doesn't mean that those prisoners were treated badly. In fact, Muslims treat their prisoners so well that in a lot of cases at the time of the prophet PBUH, they convert to Islam after interacting with Muslims - even as a prisoner!

Not to mention how the Muslims gave them back when the people of Taif (the aggressors) came to prophet Muhammad later.

War is not beautiful. Companions of prophet Muhammad PBUH and Muslims until today have lost their lives, limbs, eyes, and more during battles. Even then, as a non-combatant, you can still expect to walk on the battlefield against Muslims and not be harmed. However, you might be taken as a prisoner of war.

Can you bring me the source that says civilians can't be taken as captives?

Wth, its general literal knowledge that you can't include the civilians in war. In our religion, holding civilians as hostages and captives is strictly forbidden. The act of taking innocent people hostage goes against the principles of justice, compassion, and respect for human life. Our religion emphasizes the protection of civilians during conflicts and prohibits any form of harm or coercion towards non-combatants.

your post "I have a question", instead include the subject, for instance "What is Hajj?"

- Users who post questions regarding the religion on a specific topic should not have their threads derailed or be proselytized about other beliefs.

- NSFW/NSFL posts are restricted and must be approved by a moderator
- Do not give or imply any rulings. You can refer to and cite other rulings given by scholars.

The requirement to command the right and forbid the wrong does not apply when there is Ikhtilaf upon a position."
- Always phrase your questions and submissions in a polite manner to ensure proper responses. Keep in mind that the tone you use has a direct effect on the quality of the responses you will receive. Posts may be removed at discretion if we feel the content lacks in civility.
